How Camels Survive in the Desert

Camels live in hot, dry places like deserts. The desert is a difficult place to live because there is not much water and the sun is very strong. They can go without water for a week or longer. They store fat in their humps, which helps them survive when there is no food. Camels also have long eyelashes and nostrils that close tightly to keep out sand during sandstorms. They walk easily on hot sand because their feet are wide and flat. Camels are very resilient animals. Even in the hardest weather, they keep going. They can carry heavy loads and travel for long distances. That is why people often call camels the “ships of the desert.”
